

Things to know while choosing a gift for bird watcher.

Ornithology is one of the greatest pastimes because it enables you to meet like minded people, watch and learn about birds, know their species, while spending some quality time in the country.

So if you know somebody who is into this hobby, you could get a gift for their birthday which would be useful to them. To interpret what kinda gifts would be useful to a bird watching enthusiast, you'll need to see what gear they use.

The easiest and most reasonably priced gift is a hat. Not only would this gift can help prevent the glare of the sun but also protect them from its rays.

The next item could be a pair of cargo pants with many pockets so they can put snacks and other necessary bits and pieces inside.

A bird watching vest is another item which has more areas to store items than a pair of combat pants. They can put their cell phone on one pocket, snacks, water, map, and insect repellent and more on the others making it within arm's length rather than taking this out of the back pack.

Just in case they need a new back pack as the old one is worn out, you could also gift them one. Backpacks come in several sizes and you don't require a large one because these people travel light.

The most costly gift idea for a bird enthusiast is a pair of binoculars. Quality binoculars are costly because of the optics involved which allow the bird watcher to see the birds from a distance with great clarity. You can get plenty of features in binoculars; expensive versions allow lenses to be interchanged and some can be used to take pictures and videos even.

Bird watching journals are used by most enthusiasts, after all how else would they keep account of what birds they've seen and where; this could be a great gift.

A subscription to a bird watching periodical might also be welcomed. Most are published each monthly, and these magazines carry pictures of birds found in remote places from the Antarctic to the Amazon.

If you are cash rich, you could think of sending the person to a bird watching vacation to another part of the Americas, North or South. There are thousands of bird species and whilst there is a huge diversity of species in the US, many have not made their home there.

What does the person need and which places have they not visited are the questions that need answering before you can decide on a gift. A chat can reveal a great deal and you would get plenty of ideas; you can then choose a gift which is within your budget yet would make the person happy.

Who knows? It's possible that during the course of your shopping, you might learn to appreciate bird watching yourself. Rather than admiring such people, you would soon be joining their group.
