

Parrot Cages Selection Considerations

You should give lots of consideration to comfort factors when selecting parrot cages. Proper cage size will provide a comfortable home for your parrot and in turn give him the best possible opportunity for a healthy and happy life.

Did you know that choosing cage that is too small for your parrot can actually affect their health? Make sure your parrot is as comfortable as possible in their new how.

You should know that there are multiple things to consider in making your parrot cage purchase. The foremost cage selection factors are:

Construction: Typically cages are made out of steel with special coatings. The best cages are constructed of stainless steel with a powder coating. The cage should be the best quality you can afford. Watch out for loose parts as these can be lethal if your parrot were to swallow them.

Size of the Cage: Where possible, buy the biggest parrot cage your budget will allow. Think of the purchase as an assurance of your parrot's health and happiness. Large cages allow your parrots more freedom even while they are put away for the night. Be sure the cage is wider than tall as your bird is more likely to travel from one side of the cage to the other than bottom to top. Larger cages typically help you keep the vet bills down too.

Cage door size: Ideally you need to be able to bring your parrot out and put him away in the most easy manner. Be sure that the cage has a good latch on it as parrots are known to figure out how to break free of their cages.

Bar spacing on the cage: Be sure that the bars on any cage you choose are close together. It would be a shame to have your parrot push his head through when you are not around; it could harm your parrot or cause him to die a needless death.

To summarize, consider all aspects of your parrot's life, comfort and happiness and you will make a sound decision on your parrot cages. The forgoing list can help you avoid choosing a cage that is too cramped or difficult to deal with in caring for your parrot. It can also help you keep your parrot safe and provide you with peace of mind in your selection for years to come.
