

How To Find A Great Campsite

One aspect of camping that most people don't give a lot of thought to is finding a good campsite. If you're camping in a prepared campground this won't be much of an issue, but a lot of people like to camp out in the woods, and finding a good spot to camp in is definitely an issue. Let's take a look at what sorts of things you should look for.

The most important thing to look for in a potential campsite is a reasonable stretch of level ground. How large it needs to be will depend on a few factors, but try to find a spot that is at least 15 square yards. If it is somewhat clear of trees and growth, even better.

If the area you're looking at isn't totally clear, that's OK. You'll probably never find a spot that doesn't have anything in the way, but look around for a while until you find something good. While you're looking, keep an eye out for level ground as well. Camping on a steep incline doesn't work too well and isn't a whole lot of fun.

A little secret my old Scout leader taught me when searching for a campsite is to look for fire rings that are already in place. That means that someone else has already camped in that spot and you should be able to do so as well without too much trouble. Plus, using someone else's fire ring means you can reduce the work you'll have to do setting up the new camp and you'll keep the area looking as unspoiled as possible.

Something else to keep in mind when you're looking for a campsite is what the weather is going to be like for the next few days. If it's supposed to be cold and windy, then camping next to a copse of trees that can help break the wind might be a good idea. If it's going to be hot and shade is in limited supply, then choosing a spot that is out of the sun would be smart.

Another thing to keep in mind is to look out for evidence of animals or insects. Setting up camp next to a bear cave or on top of a bee's nest would not be a pleasant experience. The chances of anything catastrophic happening are slim, but it's definitely something to keep in mind.

Keep all these things in mind and you'll be enjoying your campsite before you know it.

About the Author

Jimmy Downson writes articles to help people enjoy camping and the outdoors. For more information on lightweight camping chairs, visit Buy Camping Chairs.com.

Source: <http://anythingaboutpets.com>