

Discover Which Dog Foods Might Just Be Poisoning Your Dog

In the past couple years there have been well over a dozen different dog food recalls. The dog food industry has been under a lot of heat as it has become quite clear that commercial dog food is produced with such low quality standards that it has the ability to cause extreme illness in your pooch.

The pet food industry has a tall task on their hands of trying to restore any confidence in commercial dog food. Many pet owners won't risk using commercial dog food ever again because of what happened.

With all these recalls it is going to be difficult for the dog food industry to ever regain the trust of thousands of dog owners. Many people lost their pets because of tainted food that made it into their house.

Beyond tainted dog food, the large dog food companies have always been in the practice of providing food for dogs that is not healthy for our pets to begin with. This has always been a problem and still is today. There are hidden dangers in dog food many of us are not aware of.

There has been a big push for us as humans to eat better and feed ourselves wholesome, unprocessed foods so that we can live long and healthy lives. This makes great sense - the food we put in our body is the fuel that gets us through each day.

Yet, do we consider what foods we purchase for our dogs to eat? Are we simply buying certain dog food based on what we think our pets like the best to eat? You owe it to your pooch to pay close attention to what you are putting in it's precious tummy.

Some of the ingredients in commercial dog food have no place in a dog's system. They are unreliable and extremely unhealthy.

Let's take corn gluten meal as the first example. This ingredient is found in most commercial dog foods simply because it is such an inexpensive filler that the manufacturers can use. However, it is also one of the main causes of allergies in dogs. This one simple ingredient has the potential to make your dog miserable.

Another disturbing ingredient used in dog food is chicken by-product meal. Where this comes from is sickening - it is made up of chickens feet, intestines, necks etc. Again, it is an inexpensive ingredient that they are trying to claim is a source of protein. However, the protein is useless and this also has the potential to be tainted or toxic.

Many dog foods include soybean meal in order to provide a source of protein. The ingredient itself isn't unhealthy, however soybean is the number one cause of allergies in dogs. It just doesn't make sense to include this considering how many dogs are allergic to it.

These are only three of the ingredients - there are many more that I could list. However, I'm sure you get the idea. The dog foods on the store shelves have the potential to make your dog very sick.

When you do your research about feeding your dog the right foods, you will be amazed at the changes you see. Your dog's mood, energy levels, skin, bathroom habits and even their behavior will improve. It's amazing what a change in diet will do.

Now, this article isn't meant to make you think that there is no commercial dog food that is ok for your dog. You just need to know exactly what to look for to make sure your pup is getting the nutrition it needs. There's a link at the bottom of this article where you can get more information.

There are resources available to begin feeding your dog with food that is not only tasty, but also nutritious to their dietary needs. You want your dog to live a long, happy and healthy life - do what you can to help them out by feeding them the right diet.

About the Author

Click Here to find out which dog foods you must avoid and how to keep your dog from getting sick. You need to know how to find healthy dog food to make sure your dog lives a long and healthy life!

Source: <http://anythingaboutpets.com>