The major consideration in choosing a breeder is that the breeder's characteristics must be good. The breeder must be reliable and must be of good reputation. If not, it will be a big problem.

A shiba inu breeder must not be defensive. He or she must not hide anything from you and he or she may allow you to see the shiba inu that they breed and interact with it. Excessive amount of litters per year is not a good trait of a breeder. Too much litter is equal to a bad breeder because it signifies dirty habits and many more. Having to adopt a dog from this kind of breeder may only lead you to have a puppy which will be very problematic and is prone to different diseases.

The breeder should also provide a good contract that protects you as the buyer and them as the sellers. Likewise, the guarantee on the health of the puppy should be in the contract and the clause that you may return the puppy when you are not satisfied can be a neat thing.

Some breeders do not agree with the return but if health is a problem, then it should be allowed. Otherwise, you can just move on to the other shiba inu breeders if you do not feel comfortable with this one. The breeder should also be easy to reach and their health certificates should be in the NSCA Breeder Referral introduction. When you find the breeder that fits all these parameters, then you may be able to adopt your shiba inu puppy from them.

The above mentioned are the good parameters of a shiba inu breeder. Moreover, you should also know the bad traits of shiba inu breeders to be avoided. Bad shiba inu breeders have a dirty place. If they won't let you go to your place, then choose another one quickly. Another thing is about the contract. If the ones mentioned are not stated in the contract, then they are not trustworthy enough so go on and find another shiba inu breeder.
