

How to Find the Perfect Pet Dog

If you grew up without having the chance to own a pet dog because your strict parents won't allow you to mingle with these supposedly filthy and hyperactive animals, then you know that your life is not the same as kids who had their favorite pup grow up with them. Now, if you don't want the same thing happening to your children, get them a pet dog that will be their best friend for life.

It is not easy to just get a dog for a pet. You have to consider plenty of things before taking the plunge. Bear in mind that you are to share your life with this animal for a long time. Therefore, think if your family members will be agreeable with your decision. Then, there is the factor of your house and lawn. You might also mull over what breed you want as well as the maintenance expenses. You have to make sure it won't drain your monthly budget.

This article will explain the reasons for each consideration. Read on so that you will be guided accordingly in your search for the ultimate dog.

If you are the sole occupant in your house, then no problem would crop up regarding this particular situation. Unfortunately, if you are already committed to somebody else and is currently living with that person, you must listen to his or her opinion. You must also heed your kids' voice if they have something to say. Be open to compromise and collaborate. All of you will be living with a new occupant. It is imperative that everybody knows what is expected of them.

Second, the size of your house and yard must be assessed. If you have a small place, a small dog should be your pet. They do not require a humongous place to play around in. If you provide them with a small dog house, they won't complain. This is not the case for guard dogs. They want a huge area where they can run and play to their heart's content. If they can't stretch their lean limbs and torso every single day, they will feel bad and get depressed. This would cause mayhem because they may throw temper tantrums. You don't want this to happen, right? Therefore, be wise enough to know what is good for your dog.

Third, read about what breed you want. Not all dogs are created the same. Take note that there are individual differences. Some dogs are prone to getting sick in dusty environments. Others are easy prey to sickness when the temperature changes. Also consider the temperament of the dog. Toy dogs like the Japanese spits and poodle are fun and enjoyable to cuddle. They are also playful so they need affectionate owners. On the other hand, German Shepherds and Rottweiler?s need owners with a dominating personality that can tame them. If you are not self-assured don't consider getting their breed. They won't obey you. Even if they are still puppies, they can sense if you can be manipulated to fit their whims or not.

Fourth, if you have a limited amount of money for the dog's upkeep, get one that is not a burden to the pocket. This means saying no to cute and furry animals that need weekly grooming care and monthly visit to the vet. Others, like the Siberian husky, need an extremely cold location in order to thrive. If you think you can't keep up with the increase in your electric bill for his air conditioning needs, forget his kind.

Be patient in choosing the dog of your choice. They will be with you for a long time so it makes sense to get the best one.

About the Author

Are you aware that missing information on insurance and pet health is one of the reasons for many pet hurts? The second biggest problem is that pet owners think that discount pet medication is equally beneficial compared to normal top notch medicin. Unfortunately they are mistaken.

Source: <http://anythingaboutpets.com>