

Reasons Why You Should Never Hit Your Puppy

In the event that you're thinking about buying a puppy and taking it home to become your new best friend, don't expect your dog to obey all your instructions from day one. You will need to teach it slowly and avoid any form of physical punishment when doing so.

Being physical with your puppy will do nothing but have an adverse effect in the relationship as time goes on between you and your pet.

As puppies are not any different to human babies, smacking your dog will not help much because it is still in its infancy and does not understand the difference between right and wrong. All you are really doing is scaring the poor animal and causing it to distance itself from you.

The reason for this is that dogs when young, do not know how to associate pain with bad behavior, unlike fully grown dogs. Remember that puppies that have just come into the world are curious and are discovering new things everyday. They also start their teething period and may have very sensitive teeth and so they chew your things. As it is already confused enough, by hitting and terrorizing it, you are just adding to the confusion.

By hitting it can causing your little new friend to be afraid of you, it will start to keep its distance from you and you'll never create the wonderful bond that some dogs have with their owners. As the pup grows to become an adult, this gap will further increase as well.

Shouting can also be terrifying for a puppy. While you think that shouting will cause no harm, the consequences are the same as hitting, and your dog will not trust you as much.

As opposed to being vocally loud, a more effective training method you should employ would be to speak to your dog in a very firm tone to get it to cease doing what it was doing. Then pick up your pup and give it a huge to give it reassurance and some love.

In conclusion, treat a your little one just as you would with a human being. Be gentle and show it kindness, and never display anger in any way, either vocally or physically. Follow these rules of conduct and you'll surely end up with a loving dog who will always serve and protect you.
