

Tips For Picking Out Dog Collars And Leashes

Make sure that when you are shopping for dog collars and leashes that they are the right fit for your pet. Every pet collar needs to be both safe and comfortable so taking the right measurements is extremely important. Wrap the tape measure around your pet's neck and insert two fingers under it. Use this measurement and add an inch or two to get the right sized collar for your dog. Dog collars typically come in even numbered sizes, so if your dog's neck measures eight inches, just go the next size up. Collars also come in a variety of widths and fastening devices as well, so do a little research and make an educated decision when choosing a collar for your canine.

Similar to how people wear different clothes, jewelry and accessories on different occasions, your dog can enjoy a large collection of collars and leashes too. You will find everything from dog collars with spikes or lights to those with rhinestones, and there are all sorts of custom dog collars, and also adjustable collars. What you opt for will depend on your personal style and the look you want your dog to have.

First, however, let's get the essentials done with. Don't use a collar which is too wide, since it can aggravate your pet's throat. Make sure that the collar and leash you decide on are strong enough to keep control of your pet if he wants to chase after things.

Limited slip dog collars and leashes are wonderful for dogs that tend to pull out of their collars. A limited slip collar is a cross between a quick-release collar and a slip collar. The way that these adjustable collars work is they tighten when the dog pulls, but do not choke the animal. This type of collar comes in a wide variety of patterns so that you aren't limited to basic styles.

When you want to express your style and sense of fashion through your loving canine companion, there is no better way to do that than with distinctive dog collars and leashes. You can get a collar that is plain and adequate for your animal's needs or you can splurge and choose one of the many unique and trendy personalized dog collars. They run the gambit from very economical to extremely expensive. What you choose really depends on your budget and how over-the-top you want to go.
