Be it a backpacker, family, or a base camper (also known as a car camper), every person wants to travel light during camping. Those opting for family or base camping also factor in comfort in their plans. Therefore, the sleeping bag one needs depends on the kind of camping one is undertaking. There are various types of camping sleeping bags. The most common types are rectangular, mummy, and tapered sleeping bags.

One of the most often used types of camping sleeping bags is the rectangular shaped bag which is also the widest kind. These sleeping bags can be zipped or unzipped completely creating a blanket effect and when two are zipped together, they are large enough for two campers. Rectangular camping sleeping bags are also usually lightweight and roll up nicely leaving room left for other camping stuff. And if you have claustrophobia, you may prefer this type because of the ample room it provides.

On the other hand, the mummy style of camping sleeping bags is the smallest type available and specifically designed to fit snugly from head to toe. Some mummy camping sleeping bags also come with an attached hood so you can wrap yourself up just like a mummy, hence their name. These sleeping bags are excellent for retaining heat and some can be rolled up neatly while others must be folded.

Tapered camping sleeping bags are similar to the mummy kind in design, but are slightly wider. They also retain heat well as they are close to the body. They are also easy to roll up and carry.

There are several different points you will want to keep in mind when shopping for camping sleeping bags. Before you buy one particular bag over another consider where you will be camping and the time of year. What type of temperatures do you expect? Naturally, camping sleeping bags that are intended for use during the spring or summer will be made of a lighter, more breathable material. Always check the sleeping bag's temperature rating, which can be found on the label, before buying.

Portability is yet another factor to consider when it comes to finding the best camping sleeping bags for your specific needs. Do you plan on carrying the bag inside of a backpack or will you be able to keep it in the car or camper? If you plan on carrying a rucksack, be sure your sleeping bag will roll up nicely and not take up too much space for the rest of your camping stuff to be transported. Pay attention to the materials used for filling in camping sleeping bags as those made from down tend to retain the most heat but they are also the costliest and take quite a while to dry out after getting wet. Synthetic filled sleeping bags are less expensive and will dry quicker if exposed to water; however, they aren't quite as warm as their down filled counterparts.

Other factors to consider include the zipper type, the type and number of people going camping, and hood designs. Whatever the camping trip, there is a camping sleeping bag for everyone.
